WILDLIFE MANAGEMENT

Copan Lake is a US Army Corps of Engineers managed lake located in northeast Oklahoma with 15,685 acres of land and water available for public use.

During your time spent on the trail, you may see a variety of wildlife, such as white-tailed deer, bobwhite quail, squirrels, rabbits, and raccoons.

Various methods of land management are used to improve the food and cover available for wildlife. Grazing leases are used to meet resource management objectives such as habitat improvement and prescribed burning is used to maintain the condition of native grassland habitat for upland game birds and other species. Other management techniques include reforestation, cover establishment, and food plots.
